Highlights Vietnamese embassy to issue birth certificate to Le Ha Birth certificate issued on same day as passport Vietnam to issue two documents on same day A Vietnamese woman has become the country's first person to be granted a birth certificate on the same day as a passport, official media reported on Wednesday, citing the country's foreign ministry. The ministry said that a birth certificate was issued to Le Ha, a Vietnamese woman living in Sweden, on the same day as her passport. The woman told Reuters that she had received her birth certificate a few days before her passport, and that she planned to use it to apply for the Swedish equivalent in about two years. But she said she had never thought that she would need her new birth certificate as a passport. Under the Vietnamese law, a couple must be officially registered within three months of the child's birth, or - if the mother is not married - within three months after the birth of the woman. The birth certificate is a copy of the original document, and is stamped with the birth date and the name of the child. Vietnam issued a record of birth for every child to be named in the national registry, such as the registered name of the father, mother, and child. But this was not official until 1956. A record of death is also maintained by the government since 1964. In recent years, both governments and private companies have been issuing birth certificates as a measure to record events in a population's life. Vietnam is a highly-populated country with a population of over 95 million people. Vietnam is also the first in Asia to adopt the practice of birth certificates for newborns.
